

Systematic Review on Trauma of Partition Reflected in The Novels

Sukla Barman, Department of English, Sardar Patel University, Balaghat
Dr. Minarul Islam Mondal, Department of English, Sardar Patel University, Balaghat

Abstract

The atrocities committed during India's partition are unpleasant thoughts for everybody. The event was momentous for the entire globe since no nation had ever been so religiously divided before. The second important aspect was mass migration. The level of extreme violence, including murders, rapes, and more, skyrocketed after partition. The violence of Partition which included killings, rapes, kidnappings, looting, and banditry remains a psychological scar on the South Asian people. The Indian Partition was the most massive and terrible mass migration that the twentieth century has ever seen. The religious intolerance that Partition sowed is still very much present in our own country. The spread of religiously motivated terrorist attacks has only served to inflame tensions further. The world can't afford to deal with disasters like this one, therefore let's not forget what happened and how it affected the subcontinent's politics, society, economy, and religion. In this article, systematic review on trauma of partition reflected in the novels has been discussed.

Keywords: Trauma, Partition, Novels.

